

Dear Tracy

Dear Tracy,

I met a man during my current undercover assignment at a rather, uh, hedonistic club. I think about him all the time. Why am I so attracted to someone with his, um, unusual tastes? And what will he think when he learns I'm with the DEA?

Desperate in D.C.,
Domino Petrocelli

Dear Domino,

The new man is more than meets the eye. You have more in common with him than you think. This man grieves for a partner, yet I'm not picking up it being a significant other. The grief runs deep. This new man you've met wonders what he sees in you. He normally doesn't like the type of woman he thinks you are. As you become more comfortable with your sexuality and the strengths it brings to you, your relationship with this man becomes more serious also. While it is danger you play and work with, this man is an entirely different level of danger for you. Guard your heart and identity well.

The man's name has the doll sound to it.
Be Safe,
Tracy
